2011 ANNUAL REPORT & REVIEW

Thirty years ago, GMHC's founders faced the incalculable terror of an impending epidemic. The waves of loss to come would change the world and their place in it. While we once adopted the urgent warning of ACT UP, Silence = Death, we now look to the future with an optimism borne by wisdom and resiliency. In honor of all those we have lost and with humble gratitude for all we have fought alongside for 30 years, we dedicate this book to them and commit our work to this hard-won truth: Love = Life.

Dear Friends,

On April 19, 2011, GMHC moved into its new home at 446 West 33rd Street. It was momentous: after years of careful planning, we saw our dream of a modern facility able to serve our community come to fruition. And after taking our place in our beautiful new building, we found ourselves and our passions reenergized and reignited.

But the move is more than a simple change of address and an array of new spaces, services, and resources. We are moved also by the support and dedication of all those who make our work possible: by the major legislative victories of a federally-mandated national HIV/AIDS strategy; marriage equality in New York State; the repeal of Don't Ask, Don't Tell; and by a new generation of leaders and advocates who do not remember a world without AIDS yet have dedicated their lives to its restoration.

Most of all, we are moved by the fearless devotion and courageous acts we've witnessed—by our clients, supporters, advocates and activists—over three decades of fighting AIDS. We invite you to join us as we both mark this solemn anniversary and celebrate our new home by continuing to support the work of thousands of devoted volunteers and staff members.

Thank you for your courage, your generosity, and your continued support.

LOVE

Love is an act of protection. By opening our doors and our hearts and minds to all those affected by AIDS, we are bound together in a spirit of mutual understanding, respect, and support.

To love is not just a moral imperative, it is a powerful weapon against AIDS. For when communities support individuals and one another, the rate of HIV infections slows—and can even be halted.

Serve

To serve a community, an organization must be a part of it. To reach out to populations affected by HIV, they must be empowered—and enabled—to reach in. While GMHC's move to a new home on 33rd Street and the opening of our prevention center in Chelsea were not planned to coincide with the 30th anniversary of AIDS, these milestones—one of time and two of place—are intertwined in both purpose and meaning.

446 West 33rd Street

Our new home on 33rd Street offers both our clients and our staff previously unimaginable benefits. Some, like the fundamental aesthetics of the space, have elevated the mood and spirit of our clients, volunteers, and staff. Others, like our new kitchen and dining room, allow us to serve more people than ever and build critical connections to care for those struggling to meet their most basic and important needs.

But perhaps no benefit is greater than gaining 40,000 square feet of modern, continuous space. For clients, it means a continuity of services that encourages them to access and utilize more programs than they might have before. For our staff, it provides new and sustained opportunities to collaborate, innovate, and serve our communities as a community.

Advocate

Until there is a cure and it is available to all who need it, our work will never be complete. The policy and advocacy work of GMHC has helped bring vital awareness to the plight of those living with HIV—and to proven prevention strategies.

The MSM Blood Ban: Defeating Prejudice to Give Life

Since 1985, the uncertainty of transmission factors and a lack of accurate tests brought about a ban against men who have sex with men from donating blood. Surprisingly, the ban still stands. This discriminatory practice reasserts old prejudices and propagates misconceptions about who is at risk and the proper way to curb the spread of HIV. Working with both the bleeding disorders community and the AIDS advocacy community, GMHC seeks to end this antiquated ban. Defeating this longstanding prejudice against gay men will help to increase the supply of vital blood products while maintaining the strictest standards of safety for all.

Public Policy staff

The Implementation of the National HIV/AIDS Strategy: A National Commitment to Care

For years, a national HIV/AIDS strategy was our policy department's highest priority. Its creation was a landmark success, and one the nation needed for decades. In 2011, President Barack Obama authorized $109 million in additional funding for HIV care to implement the strategy, with even more funds set aside for HIV/AIDS research. Those populations disproportionately at risk will now receive the improved services and care they need thanks to this federal mandate.

Aging & HIV: Advocating Health for All Ages

People aged 50 and older are one of the fastest growing at-risk populations for new HIV infections. It is estimated that 50% of those living with HIV will be over 50 by 2015. Social taboos and stigma have inhibited members of this demographic from receiving the knowledge, resources, and care they need. GMHC is working with other organizations such as the Leadership Council on Aging Organizations to ensure that public policy, including the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act, is responsive to the needs of older HIV-positive adults.

Testing Bill for Doctors and Patients: A Question of Reduction

Passage of the Testing Bill for Doctors and Patients is a milestone in the fight against AIDS, swiftly defeating bedside discretion as an excuse for the scarcity of testing.

By law, physicians must now offer their patients an HIV test during routine examinations. GMHC has long advocated such a bill, knowing for decades that the simple offer of a test is a powerful antidote to the fear of an unknown HIV status.

29% of Americans living with AIDS are over 50

Unite

Waiting for communities at risk for HIV to come to us is not an option. Vigilance is required: every new projection and epidemiological forecast compels us to develop new programs, initiatives, and media that reach those at risk and arm them with the information and services they need to lead long, healthy lives.

It has been this way since the very beginning. One of our founders, Larry Kramer, was well known for handing out leaflets at the docks of the Fire Island ferry on the dangers of HIV, years before reliable tests and effective prevention methods were known. His foresight is our mandate: to reach out and into at-risk populations and provide for them, wherever they may be.

The Lunchbox Show

The Lunchbox Show delivers important messages about HIV prevention, negotiating safer sex, and the unique challenges of being a young person of color through short video programs distributed on public media websites. Episodes feature peers from this underserved population discussing sex, love, HIV, and the issues surrounding them, openly, honestly, and supportively.

According to 2009 estimates by the Centers for Disease Control, new HIV infections increased 48% since 2006 among young, black men who have sex with men

Kiss & Tell

Building on the success and popularity of the I love My Boo campaign, Kiss & Tell urged young black and Latino men who have sex with men to protect themselves from HIV. The ads' call-to-action—to discuss HIV status openly and negotiate safer sex—was targeted to at-risk populations through high visibility placements including bus shelters and telephone kiosks. The campaign was developed in partnership with young men ages 13 to 19.

Touched

Photographer Delphine Fawundu-Buford captured portraits of women of color who are affected by HIV in her exhibit Touched, presented by the Women's Institute of GMHC. The exhibit called attention to the lives of those most at risk yet most often ignored by society at large and the media. Each portrait included a personal statement from the subject, encouraging members of her community to dialogue openly about their lives and the reduction of their collective risk of HIV.

90% of women living with HIV are black and Hispanic

You Are Not Alone

The You Are Not Alone campaign, sponsored by Merck, sends important messages about life after an HIV diagnosis to men and women of color. Providing hope and resources for long, healthy lives is a vital act of prevention: people with positive outcome expectations and higher self-esteem are far less likely to transmit HIV to others. For these populations, who are less likely to have access to affordable health care and social support networks, this message is critically important.

In 2009, the rate of new HIV infections in women of color was more than 15 times that of white women

LIFE

The battle against AIDS is waged for life. That all lives are equal—and equally precious—is the principle that has driven our work and the foundation of our advocacy since 1981. Supporting and enhancing life helps prevent new HIV infections, but not only because those who are HIV negative are given the tools needed to protect themselves. By improving the lives and health of those who are already HIV positive, the probability of transmitting HIV to others drops dramatically.

U.S. contracts HIV

Protect

Prevention at GMHC has many facets. Testing is only one. Every service and program we offer supports a mission of prevention, often by reaching those living with HIV and improving their quality of life. Data has proven that when those living with HIV adhere to treatment, eat nutritiously, and receive the social support they need, they are significantly less likely to transmit HIV to others.

Testing at GMHC

Testing continues to be the cornerstone of our prevention activities. GMHC tests wherever the need is present: in neighborhoods throughout the boroughs with our mobile testing unit; at social events that draw at-risk populations; and at our new prevention center in Chelsea. This year, we performed 3,806 HIV tests, with counselors and care coordinators immediately available to those who required them. By making HIV tests commonplace at high visibility events and locations, we normalize what for many is a foreign and frightening experience. Fear and uncertainty about HIV is replaced with knowledge, support, and treatment.

HIV testing counselors

Nutrition Counseling

Eating well does more than satiate hunger for those who live with HIV. Proper nutrition improves the efficacy of medications, elevates mood and self-esteem, and helps prevent secondary infections and diseases. The nutrition counseling program at GMHC teaches clients how to feed themselves with both their health and budgets in mind, elevating the quality of their lives while lowering their risk of transmitting HIV.

Mental Health Services and Support Groups

HIV is a disease of the body, but its effects and cofactors reach into every aspect of a client's life. That's particularly true when chemical dependence inhibits adherence to treatment and spurs the transmission of HIV to partners. The mental health services and support groups at GMHC run the gamut, from programs to help keep clients clean and sober to discussion groups that connect isolated individuals and build profound, life-affirming relationships.

Nutrition Education and Wellness team

◀ MOMS Pharmacy

Adherence to treatment prevents the spread of HIV. The inclusion of MOMS Pharmacy onsite at both our new home and our Chelsea prevention center provides clients access to life-sustaining medications when they need it most: at the moment of intervention and as part of a continuum of care. By making these vital medicines readily available, we protect both our clients' health and the health of their communities.

Mental Health Services and Support Groups staff

Uplift

Improving the quality of care and health for people living with HIV is a critical act of prevention. But in order to address the true, systemic problems that lead to HIV transmission, we must go further than medical interventions and psychosocial care. Meaningful interactions with peers, protection and advocacy against legal action, and skill enhancement to enter the workforce are all paramount to long-term, sustained health.

Meals Program and the GMHC Dining Room

The act of breaking bread together builds community where there was none before. Besides filling hundreds of empty stomachs each day, the Peter Krueger Dining Room at GMHC builds critical social relationships among clients, some of whom live alone, in poverty, and with little regular social contact. Last year, nearly 100,000 meals were served at GMHC—each an opportunity to build self-esteem and a secure support network.

Legal Services

People living with HIV are dealt the dual blows of being more susceptible to legal actions and less likely able to pay for them. Our corps of lawyers and legal professionals mitigates the anxiety and financial hardships that these legal actions cause, from landlord disputes to immigration and matters of discrimination. In turn, clients are freed to concentrate solely on what matters most: getting treatment and staying as healthy as possible.

GED program

Completing a basic education is difficult for underserved populations. Add an HIV diagnosis to social disadvantages, and a person's likelihood of completing a high school level of education drops dramatically. The GED program at GMHC prepares clients for this all-important equivalency exam, opening new, better avenues of sustained employment and a dramatically improved quality of life.

GED Program team

Workforce Development Program

Gainful employment is essential for long-term health and reduces HIV transmission rates. Yet the road to restoring productivity is fraught with difficulty for those living with HIV. Our training program teaches the essential skills of both job seeking and working in a modern office, with a wardrobe of professional attire available to help transition clients to complete professional independence.

Workforce Development Program staff

Transitional Care Coordination

Access to stable housing is a public health imperative. When a person's basic need of shelter is unmet, their risk of HIV transmission can be compounded by many factors: prostitution, intravenous drug use, and mental health issues. The Transitional Care Coordination Program serves clients on the brink of homelessness or currently homeless with tools and resources to access government benefits, entitlements, and housing services. These vital programs stem the risk factors associated with homelessness before they become inescapable detriments.

Affirm

How can we expect a person to protect their life when it is derided and devalued by their families, communities, or the media? Consistent use of safer sex practices requires not only the knowledge of how to do it properly, but the self-esteem and self-worth to insist upon it from partners. By affirming the value of the lives of at-risk populations, we decrease their likelihood of contracting HIV.

Club 1319

Club 1319 is a drop-in youth group for young men of color, ages 13 to 19. More than just a destination, Club 1319 is a self-supporting community that fosters strong social connections, accountability, and self-esteem. Its activities, like its membership, are diverse: from relaxed social gatherings, workshops on HIV prevention, and skills training to community volunteerism and celebratory “kiki” voguing events. With a new home at our Chelsea prevention center, Club 1319 provides an inclusive safe haven for all young men of color at risk for HIV.

Bristol-Myers Squibb

For over 20 years, Bristol-Myers Squibb has stood at the forefront of HIV research. But the company's medical contributions only scratch the surface of its ongoing commitment to HIV treatment and prevention.

Its field scientists and patient advocates live and work in the communities that need them most. "We believe in treating the patient, not just the disease," says Dr. Bruce Lavin, Vice President of Virology. "We, as medical advocates, must understand their needs, their circumstances... their communities, to deliver effective new treatments."

Glassybaby

In 1998, Lee Rhodes was diagnosed with a rare form of lung cancer. The next seven years were filled with rounds of dangerous surgery and chemotherapy. To cope, her husband took up an unlikely hobby: glassblowing. One day, he returned home with a small glass votive to lift her spirits. When she dropped a candle into the vessel, it sprang to life with color and light. Glassybaby was born.

"I met so many people who would miss chemotherapy appointments because they didn't have bus fare; or who couldn't afford nutritious food while getting radiation," says Rhodes. So, Lee recruited a small army of glassblowers and donated a portion of every votive's sale to organizations that provide resources for the ill and disadvantaged.

To that end, Bristol-Myers Squibb remains one of our most vocal and generous corporate allies. Since 2003, the company has been a premier sponsor of AIDS Walk New York. Over a thousand walkers joined the BMS team in 2011, raising an astounding $68,000 from personal donations, alone. Moreover, the BMS team wasn't limited to those closest to HIV research. Last year's walkers included employees from nearly every division and level, including the company's chief executive officer himself.

GMHC is the proud and grateful beneficiary of what has become her most popular votive, the Hudson. Each Hudson sold provides hot, nutritious meals for our clients, bolstering self-esteem, the efficacy of treatments, and the body's ability to heal itself.

No one can fight a 30-year battle alone.

Development department

Thank you to our donors and supporters who provide the vital funds we need to test, treat, counsel, and feed the thousands of people affected by HIV and AIDS.

For 30 years, we and the people we serve have benefited from the selfless and courageous gifts of our donors. The importance of their generosity cannot be overstated, and neither can our gratitude. The following lists acknowledge gifts made to GMHC during fiscal year 2011 (July 1, 2010, through June 30, 2011).

LGBT and GMHC History @ The NYPL with special guest

Tony Kushner Archival material dating from the early days of GMHC was placed on public display for a special exhibition at The New York Public Library on September 22, 2010. The Library's LGBT Collections — which house all of GMHC's archives — constitute one of the most comprehensive LGBT collections in the world. That evening, GMHC held a reception underwritten by board member and longtime donor Jody Falco and her husband Jeffrey Steinman. After a welcome from the Library's President, Paul LeClerc, and the Co-Chair of the LGBT@NYPL Committee, Carey Maloney, the guests were treated to trenchant remarks from playwright and activist Tony Kushner, who challenged all those present to continue working to end the AIDS epidemic.

Savor

This annual fundraising dinner helps GMHC feed thousands of people living with HIV and AIDS, and this year raised more than $650,000. The evening paid tribute to two of GMHC's longest-serving volunteers, donors, former Board members, and life-long supporters, Judy Peabody and Joan Tisch.

We were privileged to commemorate the tenacity, grace, and generosity of Judy Peabody by establishing an award in her name that is to be presented annually to someone who embodies her boundless commitment to the health and welfare of others.

It was perfectly fitting that the inaugural Judith Peabody Humanitarian Award be presented to Joan Tisch, whose own commitment to activism, advocacy, and philanthropy stands alone among her peers. In the spirit of Judy Peabody's legacy of dedication to people living with and affected by HIV and AIDS, we honored

Joan Tisch for her prodigious heart and extraordinary philanthropy which continue to have groundbreaking influence on GMHC's momentum and progress.
