30 YEARS OF GMHC

January 1982.

One hundred twenty-one gay men in California and New York City have died from two rare diseases: Kaposi's sarcoma, a cancer, and Pneumocystis pneumonia. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention expresses alarm; data supports the emergence of an epidemic. There are no tests. There is no evident cause. The single certainty is mortality.

Information is scarce and the medical community is in disarray; some doctors and epidemiologists dismiss early morbidity reports as "rumors." Others fear the worst, a coming plague in a community already underserved, understudied, and excluded from mainstream American society.

Six gay men and their friends gather in Larry Kramer's apartment to develop a response and a plan.

These are our beginnings: two rooms in a West Village townhouse; a hotline consisting of a single volunteer and an answering machine; and a group of activists who refused to allow their community to become a crucible of fear and death.

Their courage and resolve endure as the single greatest source of inspiration for the thousands of Gay Men's Health Crisis volunteers, donors, and staff who have fought on the front lines of this epidemic for thirty years. Their perseverance, strength, and unflinching optimism defined our first thirty years. And now, a generation on, we are a community of communities—a united front of allies, advocates and activists; organizations and community groups; diverse ethnicities and identities. We are bound together not by the terrifying threat of plague, but by the persistent vision of a world free from stigma, prejudice, and, most importantly, preventable infection.

This year, we look back at battles won and lost; at progress we've made and that to which we aspire; and at an epidemic whose constant change has frightened us, challenged us, but also brought us together. The sampling of GMHC's printed materials sprinkled throughout this report is meant to give you a sense of the many ways we have faced those fears and challenges over the past thirty years.

We must also look forward, to the next thirty years, and to the challenges ahead—challenges we will meet by continuing to evolve in response to the changing needs of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and questioning (LGBTQ) and HIV/AIDS communities. We look toward a future in which our vision of an AIDS-free generation is realized. And we work for a future in which all lives are valued equally; a future in which life and life alone is cause enough for us to unite, to work together, and to defeat AIDS once and for all.

LETTER FROM THE CEO AND BOARD CHAIR

Dear Friends,

It is with great pride and pleasure that we present this report on GMHC's thirtieth year to you. This anniversary is a milestone by any measure, but particularly because thirty years span a generation. And in the tradition of wisdom handed down from one generation to another, we honor our past as we depart from it, and prepare for our future emboldened by the lessons we've learned.

As the leaders of GMHC, we have the best seats in the proverbial house to watch our colleagues—courageous, dedicated, and skilled—serve our communities with compassion and perseverance. And we have the honor of seeing a new generation of volunteers take up arms in the fight against AIDS alongside some who have been here, working tirelessly, for over twenty years.

HIV has changed over these thirty years, from a swift and fatal adversary to a creeping and insidious menace, one that threatens not only individuals medically, but whole communities socioeconomically. And so we, too, have changed. We began as an agency of reaction, responding to an epidemiological crisis. Today, we are a multi-faceted organization, diverse in every way imaginable, serving the ever evolving needs of those at risk.

Our twenty-two member board is the largest and most active in our history; four physicians, including three HIV specialists, and three GMHC clients are seated on it. Our services are expanding as we pursue licensure under New York State Law, Articles 31 and 32, to address critical mental health and substance abuse treatment needs. And we have established the first permanent endowment for the agency with an initial investment of $1 million.

These are just a few steps we've taken to prepare for our future. One day, when we at long last eradicate AIDS from our world, we know that our legacy will be more than just a brave fight against a terrible disease. It will be a shining and historic example of how ordinary people, united by a vision of equality and compassion, did the extraordinary: preserved life in the face of death, cared for both the sick and the well, and, together, ended an epidemic.

Please help us make the next generation of GMHC stronger than ever by renewing your commitment to the fight against AIDS.

Thank you for your enduring support,

Marjorie J. Hill, Ph.D.

PREVENTION & TESTING 1982-2012

TESTING IS ONE OF THE MOST POWERFUL prevention tools in our arsenal. It is safe, inexpensive, accurate, fast, and noninvasive. But this was not always the case.

When the FDA approved a test for HIV antibodies in 1985, it was an expensive and arduous process, requiring a large sample of blood and weeks of lab work—while the person hoping to learn his or her status endured a frightening wait. It was also dangerous: savage stigma and fear prevailed among the general public; a positive test result would certainly lead to discrimination and a cessation of health insurance coverage; and there were no available treatments to halt or even slow the inevitable destruction of the body's immune system.

A positive test result was a death sentence. And, without confidentiality laws in place, the very act of being tested put individuals at grave risk of being outed to hostile communities and workplaces, denied health insurance, or worse.

In fact the situation was so dire, GMHC had no choice but to advise clients against being tested for HIV—an unthinkable course today—because of the certain discrimination and possible violence they faced.

Since the early 1990s, however, testing has become the cornerstone of our work. By empowering individuals with knowledge about their status, testing prevents new HIV infections, lowers the probability that a person with HIV will transmit it to others, and decreases a community's total viral load—a measurement of both total infections and the likelihood of transmission—over time. In 2012, we expanded our outreach efforts to ensure that more people in more communities know their status and that, whether positive or negative, they have the resources and support they need to live long, healthy lives.

GMHC Center for HIV Prevention

Located on 29th Street in Chelsea, the GMHC Center for HIV Prevention provides free, confidential HIV and sexually transmitted infection (STI) testing, counseling, and health education. By focusing these essential prevention services in a neighborhood disproportionately affected by HIV, we reaffirm our commitment to delivering programs to the places which and people who need them most.

The Center's Community Health and Research department works with HIV-positive individuals and those at greater risk for HIV—especially LGBT youth—and connects them with opportunities and programs for community involvement, personal development, and support groups.

Community Setting Testing

At dozens of special events, nightclubs, and bars, GMHC is there, providing onsite, free, confidential rapid HIV tests, counseling, and safer-sex materials. These programs are community-level interventions where and when they're most critical. And, if there isn't a convenient on-premises site for our programs, our mobile testing van ensures that our services are only steps away. Equal parts mission and mandate, community setting testing serves to educate and protect the individual while lowering the whole of a community's viral load.

The David Geffen Center for HIV Prevention and Health Education

The Geffen Center is at the heart of GMHC's HIV education, prevention, and community services. It is a central point of contact for our clients and the site of an array of programs designed to maintain health and wellness regardless of HIV status. It is through the Geffen Center that our testing programs and many of our client services are administered.

AWARENESS 1982–2012

BEFORE THE ACRONYM AIDS was coined in 1982, the new disease caused by HIV was dubiously known as GRID—gay-related immune deficiency. As misguided as this etiology was, it represented the first attempt to identify the structural drivers of a disease that would become as much a socioeconomic issue as a medical one.

Already, in 1982, it was apparent that AIDS was not limited to men who have sex with men. Hemophiliacs, intravenous drug users, Haitians, and heterosexual women were all perceived early as at-risk groups. It was an implausible epidemiology, and it seemed impossible to predict which population would be next.

But that, too, has changed. We now know HIV to be an infection that thrives in populations underserved and marginalized by society and government, wherever and whoever they might be. And that, because our cultural and social relationships with sexuality are complex, so too are the conditions that permit the rate of HIV infections to rise.

The antidote to HIV is awareness, dialogue, compassion, and equality. This is a fundamental truth that drives our outreach methods and the reason that, from the very beginning, social marketing campaigns have proven a powerful weapon in the fight against AIDS. When individuals receive messages about HIV in familiar language and see members of their own communities portrayed in campaigns, they're more likely to protect themselves and help others do the same.

Women's Services Rock

Women of color are the fastest-growing segment of new HIV infections. In response, GMHC developed Women's Care, Prevention, and Support Services, a comprehensive program that addresses the multitude of risk factors endemic to this unique population. Individual and group counseling; workshops on safer sex, parenting, and women's issues; and HIV testing, counseling, and care coordination are all part of the program's risk-reduction strategy, advertised through the Women's Services Rock social marketing campaign.

First Ladies Care

Communities of color are disproportionately affected both by HIV and the socioeconomic factors that drive new infections. The church, and the people who lead it, are hubs of community and education for these demographics. GMHC partnered with "First Ladies"—typically wives of ministers and pastors and community leaders in their own right—as well as female ministers in neighborhood churches to create and deliver this campaign. Their first-person narratives encouraged open communication, acceptance of those living with HIV, and proactive prevention, testing, and awareness.

Kiss and Tell

Young men of color who have sex with men are doubly marginalized because of their ethnicities and sexualities. It is a dangerous confluence of prejudices which provides haven for this epidemic. The Kiss and Tell campaign breaks through the silence and shame associated with HIV and encourages open and honest discussions about sexuality, safer sex practices, and HIV status among this underserved, at-risk population.

HIV is Ageless

The misconception that sex and HIV concern only the young persists and continues to put millions of people at greater risk for infection. While sex over 50 is a reality, there is very little sex-positive prevention education tailored to this demographic. The HIV is Ageless campaign targets communities of all ages with a special focus on people over 50, delivering compelling, first-person messages about HIV and how to prevent it—at any age.

COMMUNITY 1982–2012

HIV'S DISPROPORTIONATE EFFECT on underserved and disenfranchised demographics required and continues to require community-based response and action.

At first, in the earliest days of the epidemic, these disproportionately affected communities were disparate, insular, and exclusionary. But, over thirty years, we have begun to remove the barriers between them, build bridges among them, and, in doing so, proven that the things all people need—dignity, compassion, respect—are given when they are received, and shared when they are offered. Mutual understanding and support among these communities opens opportunities for collaboration and shared learning, creating a rising tide of progress and, in turn, lower rates of new HIV infections.

The importance of reaching out and into communities at risk cannot be overstated: preventing the social rejection and isolation of people affected by HIV is both a moral and medical imperative. That's precisely why we do not wait for at-risk populations to come to us; we go to them.

The National HIV/AIDS Strategy, which GMHC helped author and the Obama administration enacted, outlines the best practices in combating HIV so that proven, community-based actions are mirrored and implemented across the country and around the world.

AIDS Walk

The 27th annual AIDS Walk New York drew over 45,000 participants and raised millions to continue the fight against AIDS and serve all those affected by it. But besides its astounding success as a fundraiser, the AIDS Walk is a profound, public display of solidarity. It is a unifying force, bringing together diverse communities, organizations, and businesses with a shared vision of a world without AIDS. It is also a critical reminder to the public that our work is not over, and that HIV continues to affect and endanger our friends, our families, our communities, and our city as a whole.

Club 1319

Club 1319 provides a safe, nonjudgmental space for young men of color ages 13–19 to engage in meaningful dialogue about their lives, identities, and sexual health. Many have been ostracized by friends and family; others have been or are currently homeless; all are in need of a supportive and open community. The peer-to-peer relationships forged at Club 1319 build self-esteem, promote accountability, and encourage young men to make smarter choices about their health.

Latex Ball

New York City's vibrant House and Ball culture blends extraordinary creativity and community pride. The House and Ball community, comprised predominately, though not exclusively, of black and Latino LGBTQ individuals, relies on the organizational structure of "houses." A "house" is considered a club or "surrogate family" that has a "house mother," "house father," and "children" who adopt the house name as their surname. To win titles and prizes, the younger and older members of the houses compete in balls, which feature competitions in dance (such as "voguing"), modeling and costumes. The house mothers and fathers often provide support for LGBTQ youth who otherwise might be homeless, nearly homeless, and/or without any parental guidance. Because these communities face significant adversity, including poverty, substance abuse, and rejection from their birth families, they are also at particularly higher risk for HIV. GMHC's annual Latex Ball brings this community together in a night of outrageous costuming and thrilling performances, and offers prevention materials and HIV testing, which empower attendees to take control of their sexual health and protect themselves against HIV.

Fashion Forward

The fashion community, with its epicenter in New York City, has been one of our closest and most vocal allies in the fight against AIDS. Fashion Forward celebrates the contributions of gifted designers, outspoken models, and generous sponsors with a glamorous evening of runway shows, luxury auctions, and special guests. Last year's event, sponsored by Bank of America and hosted by Tracee Ellis Ross and Brad Goreski, included the first Style Vault Award presentation, honoring businesswoman and philanthropist Julie Macklowe.

Outstanding Beautiful Brothers

Outstanding Beautiful Brothers picks up where Club 1319 leaves off, with counseling, community building, and educational outreach for young men of color who have sex with men ages 16–29, regardless of HIV status. Based on the traditions of black fraternities, programs include intensive interventions and trainings on community and personal health, domestic violence prevention, and HIV awareness.

The Barbershop

The Barbershop is a weekly, cross-generational support group for men of color who have sex with men; it promotes strong social relationships and helps members build their support networks. Participants, ranging from their early twenties to the age of 84, select a topic related to life and lifestyle to discuss at each meeting. By sharing insights and challenges with one another, members of The Barbershop strengthen the bonds between them, lowering high-risk behaviors and reinforcing positive lifestyle choices.

HEALTH & WELLNESS 1982–2012

IN THE SPRING OF 1984, Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler announced that the virus that most likely caused AIDS—known as HTLV-III at the time—had been isolated by an American doctor. She proclaimed that the U.S. would have a vaccine ready within two years.

Twenty eight years after Secretary Heckler made her statement, we have neither a vaccine nor a cure.

What we do have is a dizzying array of new drug formulations that extend and improve the lives of those who have access to them. For many, HIV is no longer a fatal disease. But for others, especially those in poverty, it persists as a grave threat. GMHC works to close this perilous access gap and to ensure that the contents of a person's bank account need never determine the quality of their care nor the length of their life.

But medical care and access to it is only part of what determines a person's overall health and wellness. Food security, nutrition, employment, housing, mental, spiritual, and emotional health—each of these plays a key role in supporting and improving a life affected by HIV and preventing high risk behaviors. Our health and wellness programs have, since the foundation of the Buddy Program in 1982, served to uplift a client's life holistically.

Coordinated Care

Ironically, the complexities of HIV care—multiple physicians, myriad medications, and the daily pressures of maintaining housing and food security—can have detrimental effects on a client's health and well-being. Coordinated Care at GMHC untangles this vexing web of competing priorities, managing clients' healthcare and connecting them with the services and resources they need. In turn, clients are liberated to focus on what's most important: their mental, spiritual, and physical wellness.

Moving Ahead Toward Career Horizons (MATCH)

Steady employment is vital to the health and well-being of those affected by HIV. The Workforce Development program, known as MATCH, ensures that when our clients are ready to go to or return to work, they do so with the qualifications and training they need to succeed. MATCH prepares clients for the GED exam, provides a wardrobe of professional attire, offers interview coaching, and brings a client's computer skills up to date. Corporate sponsors including Deloitte and Microsoft have generously expanded these initiatives to include certifications and, for clients who complete certain course-work, the opportunity for an onsite interview with HR representatives. In success, these interviews provide more than just real-world experience, they provide a fresh start for a sustainable, enriching career that can last the rest of a client's working life.

Michael Palm Center for AIDS Care and Support

The Michael Palm Center is the core of GMHC's holistic health services, with a variety of programs focused on mental and spiritual health, prevention activities, and community engagement. Support groups, individual counseling, art and creative therapies, recovery groups, and treatment adherence counseling serve clients over the long run, and ensure that no one must face the challenges of living with HIV alone.

Meals & Nutrition

A well-nourished body is not only healthier, but better able to process and receive the benefits from many HIV medications. But poverty and substance dependency—rampant among people living with and at risk for HIV—often interfere with food security and nutrition. The GMHC Meals Program serves nearly 100,000 healthful, balanced meals a year in an atmosphere that promotes social connections and emotional wellness. The Keith Haring Food Pantry Program provides groceries to those in need, complemented by cooking classes that promote nutritional self-sufficiency. Our nutrition counselors coach clients not only to eat properly, but to enjoy a diverse, economical diet that supports physical health, emotional well-being, and the efficacy of common HIV medications.

LIFE AFTER AIDS

THE PROGRESS WE'VE WITNESSED over the last thirty years—medical, social, legislative—would be unimaginable to our six founders on the day they met for the first time. And yet, HIV's single constant throughout its course has been, and will always be, change.

And so, while we celebrate the achievements of so many courageous activists and advocates, including and especially the National HIV/AIDS Strategy, we must also prepare for the next thirty years of challenges that lie directly ahead, standing between us and our vision of a world without AIDS.

Addressing the social and economic structural drivers of this epidemic will eventually supplant its medical challenges as the most critical component of care. With your support, we will be ready and able to care for those affected by them and to permanently banish HIV to the annals of our shared history.

The economic crisis that began in 2008 continues to have a lasting and profound effect on demographics at risk today and on communities that have yet to be affected by HIV. Poverty, and the deprivations that come with it, is a terribly effective driver of new HIV infections and has only begun to be recognized and addressed.

But, in the coming years, we will be at an advantage. Our communities are stronger than they have ever been. Decades of data and research prepare us to proactively serve at-risk populations. And the lessons of the past—successes as well as unfulfilled aspirations—arm us with the most potent defense against HIV: knowledge.

RITA FISHER

IN 1984, RITA FISHER'S SON, JAY, CAME OUT to her and her husband. "We didn't even know what 'being gay' meant," she remembers, 27 years later. Jay had written down the number for PFLAG (Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays), and urged his parents to call.

"After our first meeting, we were hooked. It was the height of the AIDS epidemic and I decided we needed to do something." It was at one of those PFLAG meetings, after seeing another parent's grief over losing their child to AIDS, when Rita and her husband learned about the AIDS Walk.

"In the first year, we raised $300, at a time when people were afraid to drink from the fountain or sit on a toilet because they worried about catching the disease." Year after year, Rita's fundraising amounts—and efforts—grew. She never passed up an opportunity to convince someone to donate, even in the most unexpected places. "I was waiting for a plane in the airport when three guys—real macho morons—came up to me. They saw my AIDS Walk hat and T-shirt and one of them said, 'You must have a lot of condoms... do you have any samples?' and I said, 'First you have to tell me what size you need.' He walked off embarrassed, but not before he gave me $5."

This year, Rita passed an astounding milestone. At this year's AIDS Walk New York, Rita surpassed a fundraising total of $750,000. "Three quarters of a million dollars! I bring the paper that shows that amount with me wherever I go. And I still wear my cap and buttons when I collect donations."

Rita's efforts are more than unique—they're heroic. And, at the age of 88, she's far from ending her work: "I want to reach $1 million. And I want AIDS to be finished."

GLYNIS SIMMONS

“THERE IS NOTHING A PERSON CANNOT DO once they decide to do it.”

Glynis Simmons speaks from experience. Long before she joined GMHC in 1998 in Women and Family Services, she faced some of life’s toughest challenges.

She arrived in New York City from the Virgin Islands in 1972 following her mother’s death from breast cancer and lived with her father, from whom she was estranged. She was alone, far from home, and without the person she needed most. Depression and addiction followed.

But that would change when she met Isabel Scott, a woman who became both surrogate mother and mentor to Glynis. Isabel saw something special in her, and convinced her that she had untapped strength that could be put to good use. It started in the kitchen, where Isabel taught Glynis to cook like a native southerner. But it also carried Glynis through her recovery, too. She started work as an addiction counselor at Lincoln Hospital. Soon, she was consulting at GMHC, too.

After just a year, Glynis was hired for a full-time position in 1999. Over the next two years, she was promoted twice. In each position, Glynis excelled, offering clients and staff alike her special mix of empathy, mentorship, and wisdom. Today, she is the Assistant Director for Women’s Care Prevention and Support Services, coordinating GMHC’s women’s programs, training a new generation of women advocates, and leading by example every step of the way.

Glynis’ success over unimaginable hardship isn’t just a personal victory, though; it’s a source of inspiration to the hundreds of GMHC clients whose lives she’s touched over the years. According to Bill Bracker, Psy.D., director of the Michael Palm Center for AIDS Care and Support, “Glynis’ journey reflects triumph over struggle, and it informs and enriches her counseling with women at GMHC. She inspires others to live the best life possible.”

FELIX LOPEZ

THERE IS NOTHING ORDINARY ABOUT THE DIRECTOR of GMHC’s Legal department, Felix Lopez.

He is a former self-described juvenile delinquent with a JD from Yale Law School. He spent three years in the United State Army, and now occasionally cooks dinner for his old friend, Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor. And while he regularly receives profane hate mail laced with homophobic slurs from the unlucky plaintiffs and defendants who face him in court, he is straight and happily married.

Felix’s passion and unwavering dedication is rooted in deep, personal tragedy. In 1986, his brother learned he was HIV positive. He was gay, but never felt comfortable sharing his sexual identity with his family. With his health swiftly declining, he took his own life. When Felix discovered what had happened, he was overwhelmed by grief. He wrote a letter to his brother. In it, he pledged to spend the rest of his life combatting AIDS and fighting for equality for all people. Felix tucked the letter into his brother’s casket on the day of his funeral.

“I was close to my brother but not close enough to make him feel that he could disclose to me the fact that he was gay. No doubt my relative silence on HIV and homophobia contributed to this,” Felix explained. “I knew then that all of us have a responsibility to speak up against bigotry. It isn’t enough to not be a homophobe. A person has to speak up—to act up, as they used to say. We all have an obligation to speak for justice.”

Ignited by the promise he made to his brother, Felix has transformed legal services at GMHC. “When I started, we had 240 clients and eight lawyers. Now we’re down to six lawyers, but have about 1,800 clients,” he reports, “We help clients obtain benefits, stabilize their housing, overcome discrimination, manage their debts, and obtain referrals for counseling.

“We help folks manage when the world threatens to become unmanageable.” And, in doing so, Felix and the Legal department team remove some of the most critical barriers standing between clients and the long, healthy lives they deserve.

JOSEPH NEESE

“MY UNCLE WAS A SECOND FATHER TO ME,” remembers Joseph Neese, a young journalist and HIV activist. “I remember when I came out to him, he called me the very next day, and we spent hours on the phone. He told me everything: what it meant to be gay, how important it was to speak up and what I needed to know about protecting myself and my friends from HIV. I have no doubt the tools he gave me saved my life.”

But Joseph’s uncle wasn’t just a supportive family member. He was also one of GMHC’s earliest hotline volunteers, its first paid executive director, and a historic figure in the fight against AIDS, Rodger McFarlane.

Joseph was devastated by the loss of his uncle in 2002. Then, nine years later, with the help of social media and a bit of kismet, he found a new connection to his memory. A single tweet introduced Joseph to GMHC’s Communications department. “It was as though I had discovered a whole new branch of my family tree,” Joseph said.

In a matter of months, Joseph quit his job and was on his way to New York City to pursue a career in communications. When he arrived, one of his first stops was GMHC. And, just like his uncle, he arrived ready to work. “I’m the second generation from a family who’s dedicated itself to fighting AIDS. As I got older, I hoped in some small way I could live up to my uncle’s legacy. I knew I wanted to do whatever I could to help realize his vision of a world without AIDS, without homophobia, without any type of discrimination.”

Since that chance meeting online, Joseph has become one of our most dedicated and active volunteers, generously sharing his time and talents, most closely with the Communications department. As a founding member of the Millennium Committee, Joseph is helping reach and empower a new generation of activists, advocates, and donors. “If we can energize and educate this new front, I know I’ll get to see an AIDS-free generation during my lifetime,” Joseph said, “and I think that’s the best way I could honor my uncle’s legacy.”

A|X ARMANI EXCHANGE

SINCE ITS FOUNDING IN 1991, A|X Armani Exchange has been a proud and vocal supporter of HIV and LGBT causes. But this company—one of the most recognized and celebrated fashion brands in the world—has donated more than just financial resources to the fight against AIDS.

“Many of us in the fashion community have been affected by the AIDS epidemic, and have lost friends and loved ones over these years,” said Rocco Venneri, Senior Director of Communications for the company. And in response to the disproportionate effect of HIV on the fashion industry, the executives and employees at A|X have opened their hearts and devoted countless hours to advocacy and volunteerism.

The company’s annual presence at AIDS Walk New York, its sponsorships of Fashion Forward and Spin Away AIDS, and the thousands of hours its employees and executives have spent serving meals in our kitchen and organizing volunteer teams have made A|X one of our closest and most generous allies for over a decade.

“The real gratification has come from face to face contact with GMHC clients. It means so much to us and makes us feel like we’re making a difference in people’s lives,” Rocco noted, “A simple look or a thank you makes it all worth it.”

But the company’s efforts deserve more than a simple ‘thank you.’ As a major brand with millions of customers and fans, its courageous messages of advocacy, compassion, and support ring through the industry, uplifting the lives of those affected by HIV and helping those at risk protect themselves and their communities.

OUR WORK IS ONLY POSSIBLE BECAUSE OF OUR SUPPORTERS.

FOR OVER THREE DECADES, GMHC has worked to uplift the lives of all affected by the HIV/AIDS epidemic with our groundbreaking prevention and testing, care services including nutrition and legal programs, and public policy work. This work would be impossible without the generosity of the individuals, corporations, and foundations listed below. We gratefully acknowledge all gifts made between July 1, 2011, and June 30, 2012, and we are indebted to our donors' leadership.

On behalf of our clients, board, and staff, thank you for your generosity, as we all continue in the fight against HIV and AIDS.

FASHION FORWARD

FROM THE EARLIEST DAYS OF THE AIDS EPIDEMIC, the fashion industry has been a major force in raising public awareness and supporting organizations that provide services to people living with HIV. To honor that unwavering legacy of support, GMHC launched Fashion Forward in 2007, saluting the fashion industry and its long-standing commitment to the fight against AIDS.

Our 2011 event was hosted by famed actress Tracee Ellis Ross and fashion stylist Brad Goreski. To mark our fifth year, we introduced a new tradition by presenting the inaugural Style Vault Award to New York businesswoman and philanthropist Julie Macklowe. The Style Vault award will be presented annually to an individual or company that embodies the highest levels of distinctive style and compassionate philanthropy.

The audience was also treated to a once-in-a-lifetime glimpse of French haute couture fashion designer Jean Paul Gaultier, who presented his archival looks from past seasons. The full designer lineup also included Chris Benz, Thom Browne, Marlon Gobel, Sally LaPointe, Zang Toi, Timo Weiland and VPL. It's a fall fashion event not to be missed, raising close to $300,000 in vital funds for GMHC's programs and services.

30TH ANNIVERSARY DINNER

THIS YEAR'S ANNUAL DINNER COMMEMORATED the agency's 30th year of prevention, care, and advocacy services for thousands affected by HIV/AIDS. At the 30th anniversary event, GMHC honored three outstanding corporate, social justice and charitable leaders: Tim Sweeney, the Rudin Family and Duane Reade.

Duane Reade has been a corporate sponsor of AIDS Walk New York since 1986. Already, Duane Reade's commitment has exceeded $1 million, and there is every indication that this extraordinary partnership will last well into the future. Tim Sweeney, whose biography reads like a 30-year history of the progressive LGBTQ movement and the fight against AIDS, is President and CEO of the Gill Foundation. Under Tim's leadership, GMHC formed a national coalition to press Washington to pass anti-discrimination laws and to secure passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act and the Ryan White Care Act—two seminal pieces of legislation that are relied on to this day. The Rudin Family, one of New York's leading philanthropic families, has always been committed to giving back to the city that has given them so much opportunity.

The evening was hosted by the talented Mary Louise Parker, and an elegant dinner was prepared by the renowned chef of Butter and The Darby and Food Network TV star, Alexandra Guarnaschelli. This year's event was a great success, raising over $592,347, which allows GMHC to feed over 100,000 meals in our dining room to clients living with HIV/AIDS, most of whom live well below the poverty level.
